

HON. JULIUS E. BOGGS, CANDIDATE FOR CONGRESS.

A Self Made Man—Born on a Farm In the Mountains of Pickens County—Now One of the Best and Brightest Solicitors in the State.

Extract from a sketch of Mr. Boggs' life in the Pickens Journal soon after his election as solicitor.

"Born on a farm in Pickens county, on the 14th of February, 1851, he was reared in the county receiving his early education under the instruction of Miss Clayton and later under the Rev. J. L. Kennedy, a noted educator. He also attended the Pickens Academy, conducted by Prof. Carlisle, after which he taught the school at Liberty, where he remained for two years, then coming to Pickens where he taught one year.

"At the age of twenty-two he began the study of law under Col. C. I. Hollingsworth at Pickens, was admitted to the bar in 1880, and entered upon the practice of his profession. In 1881 went to Marshall, Tex., and was admitted to practice in the courts of that State, but two months later returned to Pickens where he has ever since been actively engaged in the practice of law. Was elected to the legislature in 1882, being next to the youngest member of that body at that time and was reelected in 1884.

"A gentleman of pleasant address, possessing considerable personal magnetism, he is a delightful conversationalist and doubtless one of the most popular men in the State. He is now solicitor of the 10th circuit, the duties of which office he discharges with conspicuous ability, guarding with zealous care the rights of the Commonwealth, yet ever observant of those belonging to its individual citizens. He is a speaker of much clearness and force, possessing at the same time the happy faculty of fine-tuning his speeches with wit and humor.

The Daily Mail of Jan. 17, 1907, had the following to say of a speech Mr. Boggs made on a famous case.

"Mr. Boggs' speech was listened to with intense interest. He spoke for about an hour. His speech was pronounced by all who heard it as the finest speech ever made in the Anderson court house. He was relentless in his arguments for conviction, but was at all times logical and always fair. He did not make an unworthy or prejudiced appeal."

SMUGGLING THE WILY CHINEE.

The United States immigration inspectors along the Mexican border are convinced that scores of Chinamen enter this country unlawfully every month from Mexico and that for several years a well organized underground railway scheme has been in operation to get the Celestials across the line.

Americans are believed to be at the head of this movement, says the Kansas City Star. It is only occasionally that contraband Chinamen are apprehended. All sorts of devices are made use of to conceal the Chinamen and to guide them into the interior of the United States, where there is little danger of their unlawful entry into the country being discovered. Chinamen are being landed by the boatload every few weeks at the ports of Salina Cruz and Manzanillo, Mexico.

Notwithstanding the fact that they come direct from China it is a matter of common observation that most of these new arrivals on Mexican soil have a speaking knowledge of the English language when they get off the boat. Upon many of them are found English dictionaries. They continue the study of English after reaching Mexico, and in a short time they are ready to make such a good showing in speaking the language that should they be questioned on this side of the border they would readily pass as having resided for some time in the United States.

A. G. Bernard, G. G. Gonzales and Oscar F. Miller, three American immigration inspectors, were patrolling the border in New Mexico recently when they happened to stop at the home of a ranchman whom they knew. This ranchman told them that a covered wagon, drawn by a team of good horses and driven by a white man, had passed that way two days before and that while the white man was watering his horses the ranchman happened to glance into the bed of the wagon and saw a number of Chinamen lying therein.

The ranchman suggested to the immigration inspectors that the Chinamen were being smuggled from Mexico to some interior point in the United States. The inspectors immediately mounted their horses and started on the trail of the wagon. The inspectors kept up the pursuit for three days and nights, and finally came in sight of the wagon near the little town of Tularosa. The canvas cover was closely drawn. One of the inspectors rode up on one side of the wagon, another on the opposite side and the third brought up the rear. A white man sat upon the seat in front driving the horses.

"Hello, stranger!" said Bernard, "where are you traveling?"

The driver did not seem inclined to take any notice of the question, but when it was asked him a second time he replied that he was going to his ranch, located above Tularosa.

"What have you in your wagon?" Bernard asked.

This was a pointed question, but seeing that Bernard and the other two men were armed the driver answered:

"I've got a mighty sick wife back mustn't be disturbed. This talkin' is there," jerking the thumb of one hand over his shoulder to indicate that she was lying down in the wagon bed. "I've had her down to Alamogordo, but the doctors don't seem to do her much good."

"That's tough," said Bernard, with a feigned tone of sympathy in his voice. "That fellow there," pointing to Gonzales, "is a mighty good doctor, suppose you let him look at her."

"Oh, no," the driver replied. "She liable to excite her, and I guess you fellows had better ride on."

"Not until we've seen that sick wife of yours," Bernard answered, at the same time leveling his rifle at the driver.

"You've got me," said the man.

One of the inspectors raised the side cover of the wagon and brought to light sixteen Chinamen who were lying close together upon hay in the wagon bed. The white man gave the name of W. Sullivan. He and the contraband Chinamen were taken back to Alamogordo and placed in jail.

A short time ago one of the immigration inspectors was passing through the Big Bend region south of Alpine, Tex., when he came upon what seemed to be a Mexican camp. It was located about 100 yards from the road in a sparsely settled region. The inspector happened to be feeling the need of a cup of coffee, and knowing that the nomadic Mexicans along the border always carry a supply with them upon their travels he left the road and went up to the camp. When he drew near he saw that there were apparently two or three families of Mexicans in the party. All were dressed in Mexican fashion—some as old women, others as common laborers and others as young men and women.

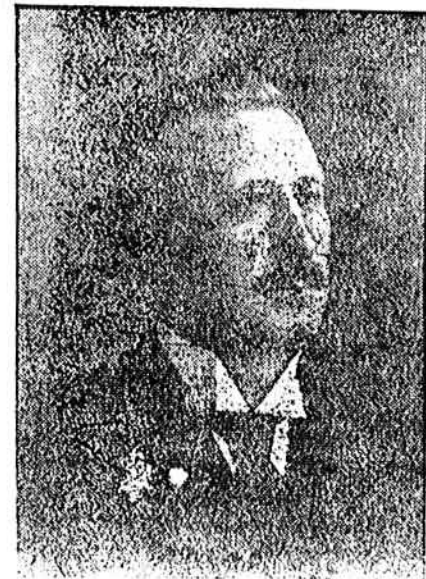

The inspector noticed that several members of the camping party hurried into the underbrush when he drew near, but he attributed this to their diffidence. When he got within a few feet of a group of men and women he asked them in Spanish if he could get a cup of coffee. One of the men made answer in the affirmative, but the inspector quickly detected that the Spanish which he used was strongly tinged with the Chinese accent. In another moment the inspector had the whole crowd covered with his pistol and they were tied together and taken to the nearest ranch house, where he received assistance and the twelve prisoners were taken to jail. All proved to be Chinamen who had entered the country unlawfully and were making their way to the nearest railroad point in the disguise of Mexicans. The five or six Chinamen who escaped to the underbrush were not captured.

The United States government authorities believe that many Chinamen enter this country from Mexico in sealed box cars, but it is a difficult matter to discover these violators of the law without opening and examining every car. Two freight car shipments of Chinamen recently were detected. One of these was on the Texas and Pacific railway near Baird, Tex., and the other was at Sanderson, Tex., on the Southern Pacific.

TO THE DEMOCRATIC VOTERS.

To the Democrats of South Carolina: As a business man, who has found that the application of business methods to all problems—governmental as well as others—has accomplished the best results, I have offered myself as a candidate for the United States senate, believing that I can be of some service to the people of my state, to the south and to the great democratic party. Together with the other candidates for this office, in accordance with the rules of the party I have canvassed the state and expressed my views candidly and honestly on the issues of the day. I have made the race on my merits, as a business man and as a democrat, and I have not sought and do not seek to win this high position by pointing out any demerits which my competitors may possess.

In seeking the suffrages of my fellow democrats, I can pledge them the best efforts of which I am capable, in maintaining the fundamental principles of the democratic party.

to which I have always subscribed. I stand for a more liberal currency system, that will enable the communities of the south to become independent of the Wall street combinations; I stand for a just revision of the tariff laws, as immediate revision of duties to the lowest point consistent with the needs of the government economically administered; I stand for railroad regulation upon a just basis; for an intelligent system of drainage with federal aid; and I shall if elected oppose the centralization tendencies which are now a menace to our free institutions.

It is my ambition to represent the people of my native state in the senate and in soliciting their support I can assure them that if elected I will endeavor first and all the time, to serve South Carolina's interests with my whole heart and energy.

R. G. RHETT.

Rhett For Senator.

A man better equipped for the office of United States senator than R. Goodwyn Rhett, of Charleston, could not be easily found. Trained to the practice of the law and successful in his profession, his natural tendencies have led him into constructive business, and his engagement in public affairs has followed as a consequence of commercial and industrial efforts, and not from political interest. He is not a politician at all, as the term is usually understood. He is a business man, intensely interested in the material development of the state, who has thought deeply upon the ways whereby the public welfare may be promoted through practical legislation.

Born in Columbia, educated in the schools of Charleston and at the University of Virginia, Mr. Rhett began the practice of the law in Charleston. He met with success from the first. Particularly attentive to commercial law, he soon became interested in business enterprise and development. The rehabilitation of an impaired bank having come into his field of effort, he devoted himself to the task with marked ability and eminent success, and from this essay he was led into banking as a profession. He became the head of one of the strongest banks in the state, and he has, for more than ten years, directed its affairs not only profitably to the institution but in the largest measure to the benefit of his community and of the entire state.

Elected an alderman of the city of Charleston, he soon became recognized as an exponent of business methods in government and an advocate of commercial development. He was called to the mayoralty practically by the unanimous voice of the business men of Charleston and, at the conclusion of his four-year term, was re-elected without opposition. He has devoted himself to the promotion of better relations between the people of Charleston and their neighbors in all parts of South Carolina, and has endeavored in every way to make mutual the advantages and the resources of the great port and the great interior region of the state. No enterprise and no development promising benefit to the whole people of the state has failed to command his sympathy and support. His fight for fair rates and efficient service by the railroads has been one of the most notable and effective undertakings ever made in South Carolina.

Mr. Rhett believes he can serve the state in a wider sphere, and he has definite ideas of the service he can render, and these he is setting forth in his campaign for the democratic nomination for United States senator. ADV.
